LOANS TO CREDIT UNION OFFICIALS

The Board of Directors delegated to the Executive Committee the authority to approve loans to officials when the total loan balance (less share secured or certificate secured) exceeds $20,000.00. If a member of the Executive Committee is requesting a loan, action by the full Board of Directors will be required.

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

OBLIGATIONS OF DIRECTORS

As custodians of the members' interest, directors exercise authority derived from the members. The directors are trustees of the funds that the members place in their care. They have an obligation to manage the affairs of the credit union in such a way that the purposes for which the credit union was organized are attained. They must direct its business and make certain that the credit union does not engage in activities that exceed its powers. They must discharge the duties of their offices in good faith and with the diligent care and skill that prudent men and women would exercise under similar circumstances in like positions.

To fulfill their trust to the members, directors need to become thoroughly familiar with the purposes of a credit union. Failure to know what is required of directors under the credit union's charter, its bylaws, the Federal Credit Union Act, and the rules and regulations, will not relieve them of their responsibilities.

If a director fulfills his/her responsibilities, he/she will not incur any personal liability for corporate actions. However, if they make decisions primarily on the basis of their own self-interest, if they fail to act in good faith, or if they exceed their authority, they may become personally liable to the members in the same way that a director of any other corporation or financial institution would become liable.

Because the board of directors is given the responsibility and authority to direct the affairs of the credit union, those elected to these positions of trust should fully understand their opportunities and obligations as directors of a corporation.

OPPORTUNITIES OF DIRECTORS

The members of a credit union that are elected to the board of directors are individuals whose honesty, ability, and judgment to manage competently the affairs of the credit union are respected. To be selected by one's fellow members is more than an honor; it is a real opportunity to make a worthwhile contribution toward a better living for the members of the credit union. An effective director gains great personal satisfaction when they see the results of faithful performance of their trust.

The experience gained as a director of a successful and well-managed credit union has enabled many men and women to achieve managerial success beyond the credit union. Their leadership abilities, executive skills, and human relation talents have frequently been revealed when they have had the opportunity to serve as directors and executive officers of a credit union.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR DIRECTORS

Directors must be members of the credit union. They should possess the personal qualities that are needed to enable them to serve the credit union effectively, and should be honest at all times. A good director is unselfish and acts for the benefit of the credit union's members rather than for his or her own interest. No director should attempt, either directly or indirectly, to influence a credit union's decision that affects his or her family's financial interest. (Other officials and employees must also refrain from acting on matters which affect them or their family's financial interests.) Since directors cannot be paid for their services, they must be sufficiently interested in the credit union and sufficiently generous to give their own time and skills to its affairs. Good directors insist that the operating officials give them facts. Directors must have the ability to understand the given facts, and to make sound decisions based upon them. Above all, good directors must be able to think for themselves. If directors merely act as "rubber stamps" for the treasurer, manager, or president, they lack the qualifications needed for their office.

Persons who accept the position of director do not warrant that they are an experienced bank, accountant, or financier. They may have been elected to the board of directors primarily because of their integrity or personal popularity, and may lack intimate knowledge of credit union operations. With sufficient desire, however, they can acquire the necessary skills and ability to become excellent directors by learning as much as possible about the credit union, its objectives, the rules under which it operates, and the duties of directors.

VELOCITY CREDIT UNION'S ELECTION PROCEDURES

WHEREAS, Velocity Credit Union's By-laws do not cover in detail the procedures for nomination by petition for elective offices; and

WHEREAS, it has been necessary for the Executive Committee to spend an inordinate amount of time and effort in attempting to verify petition signatures because of illegible signatures and missing account numbers; and

WHEREAS, Velocity Credit Union has been subjected to large expense in the defense of a law suit filed by a petitioner for nomination for elective office; and

WHEREAS, Velocity Credit Union desires to conform to its By-laws, but also to provide and publish its detailed election procedures to cover the matters not addressed in its By-laws so that all members will know the requirements for obtaining a position on the ballot;

NOW, THEREFORE, Velocity Credit Union Board of Directors hereby adopts the following Election Procedures as Board Policy.

- D. Notwithstanding the preceding paragraph, a petitioner may petition expressly for an unexpired term Vacancy, in which even such petitioner shall be placed on the ballot for such unexpired term along with those nominated by the Nominating Committee for that unexpired term.
